Mission

Educators' Society for the Heritage of India (ESHI) is a resource pool and think-tank of educators, scholars and members of the academic community. ESHI provides authoritative information and resources related to India's heritage, culture, history, Dharma, philosophy, theology and languages, to schools and colleges, teachers, curriculum developers, authors, publishers, education officials, policy-makers, media, interfaith organizations, non-profit organizations, leaders and the public in North America.

Motivation

India has always attracted world's attention. India's culture, heritage, traditions and philosophies find its place in school education, college and media. Much of this information is provided by people who come from outside of the Indian traditions. As a result, considerable information about Indian traditions is inaccurate. With this concern, a number of scholars, educators, and community leaders met at the Global Dharma Conference in Edison, New Jersey in July 2003 to address the need for greater involvement of Indian professionals in the school and college curricula and in the media.

The Educators' Society for the Heritage of India (ESHI) was thus formed by scholars, educators, and community leaders. ESHI is incorporated in New Jersey as a tax-exempt organization under 501(c)(3).
